Fact-finding Investigations on Human Rights

Meets remotely Mon. and Wed. 1:00 - 2:15 pm

3 credit, full-semester course

Canvas course link

Course Description

This course will familiarize you with core principles and techniques for human rights fact-finding, focusing especially on interviews.

You'll learn practical skills: how to plan and prepare for fact-finding interviews; navigate security challenges; tailor interviews for specific populations; interview government officials; conduct remote interviews; minimize the risk of retraumatization and vicarious trauma; and adapt fact-finding interview approaches for challenging locations. Readings and exercises will address specific considerations when interviewing LGBTQI+ survivors, children, people with disabilities, older people, and other groups.

This seminar uses role-play simulations as a learning tool. Most weeks, we will spend one class session discussing topics and interview techniques, and the other putting them into practice through role play exercises with pairs of students. After many shorter practice sessions in class, you'll do a full, in-depth mock interview with me.

The course draws heavily on my experience conducting fact-finding interviews and training staff at Human Rights Watch, where I was a director working on women's human rights globally, as well as previous experience as a lawyer. We'll also learn from the methodologies of specific projects of HRW and other organizations.

Personal Zoom meeting room link

Pronouns: She/her/hers

Office Hours: Tuesday (11:30-1:00) and Thursday (2:00-3:00) or by appointment. I also welcome spontaneous chats any time.

About me: I'm a Senior Fellow in Humphrey School of Public Affairs, and in this role I teach, advise, and engage with students interested in human rights careers. I'm also a lawyer who has advocated for gender equality and women's human rights around the world through work with nonprofits, the United Nations, and law firms. Prior to joining the U of M last year, I worked for Human Rights Watch for 17 years, as the deputy director of the Women's Rights Division. There, I helped lead the organization's work on issues such as gender-based violence, sexual and reproductive rights, women's land and property rights, family laws, the rights of women workers, and work-family policies. I trained and guided staff, including on the interview skills we'll practice in this course.

Learning Objectives

Through this course, you will understand what fact-finding is, and how fact-finding interviews are used in the human rights field. More specifically, you will have developed interviewing skills and knowledge that will enable you to:

- Understand core standards and ethical considerations for human rights interviews
- Interview survivors of human rights abuses, and understand best practices for interviewing specific populations
- Interview government officials
- Navigate remote interviews
- Assess and handle security risks for interviews
- Obtain data and information from official sources
- Understand and mitigate risks of retraumatization and vicarious trauma

Course Mode, Structure and Approach

This is an online course due to the coronavirus pandemic. Most class sessions will be synchronous, but a few (about 4 of the 28 classes) will involve asynchronous modules. Dates for asynchronous modules will be confirmed at the beginning of the semester.

Most weeks, we will spend one class session discussing topics and techniques, and the other putting them into practice through in-class role play exercises with pairs of students. Toward the end of the semester, you'll do a full, in-depth mock interview with me.

This is the Spring 2021 Syllabus. It is being updated for the 2022 course.

I'm inviting several guest speakers, and will share more info at the beginning of the semester.

The basic flow of topics we'll cover is:

- Core standards and ethical considerations
- Informed Consent
- Demographic information
- Considerations for specific populations
- Preventing and addressing retraumatization
- Ending interviews; referrals
- Remote interviews
- Obtaining secondary information
- Interviewing officials
- Security planning; Restricted locations
- Multimedia interviews
- Ensuring Accuracy
- Stress, resilience, and mitigating vicarious trauma from human rights work

Assignments and Grading

The assignments are short and practical. They're designed to build your skills in planning and conducting human rights interviews. There is no lengthy written paper assignment, and no final exam. Detailed instructions for written assignments and skills exercises are in a separate guidance document posted on Canvas.

Students have the option for the final grade to be on the A-F grade scale or S/N (Satisfactory or Not Satisfactory). For additional information, please refer to:

<https://policy.umn.edu/education/gradingtranscripts>.

Grading overview

- | | |
|--|-----|
| ● Class participation | 60% |
| ● Written assignments (10 points each) | 20% |
| ● Mock interview with instructor (50 points) | 20% |

Elements of class participation include speaking, contributing through Zoom chats, and asking questions during class; participating in simulated interviews and skills exercises; and serving as a "class support person" (primarily to monitor the chat) during a designated week.

Participation points will be lost if students repeatedly miss class without notifying me, but otherwise you're likely to get full credit for participation. Absences can of course be excused.

This is the Spring 2021 Syllabus. It is being updated for the 2022 course.

All class discussions must be respectful of diverse opinions. Please also be appropriate as you take on characters for your role play simulations.

Course Materials

There is no textbook. Our main readings are an online UN human rights monitoring manual, portions of a Human Rights Watch training manual on interviewing (used with HRW permission), and resources from other organizations. You will receive a PDF with the HRW manual readings, and links for the rest are on Canvas. Please do not share the HRW manual materials with anyone other than participants in this class. HRW is kindly letting us use this resource, but the manual is not a public document.

To keep your reading load manageable, I'm asking you to “read” some sources carefully, and briefly “skim” others. Many of the materials for you to skim are methodology sections of human rights reports. You can skim other sections, which will help you understand why they chose this methodology, but this is not required.

Please always have a pen and paper handy during class, and use them to take notes during practice interviews.

Wellbeing and Minimizing Vicarious Trauma

Some of the readings and exercises for this course address violence and discrimination. The content may be disturbing and stressful to read or view. In class, I will suggest techniques to minimize the risk of vicarious trauma. I ask that we all work to create an atmosphere of respect and sensitivity in the classroom.

If you are struggling with the course because of the content, speak with me and/or seek help from the counseling center or other support services, including those explained under “Mental Health and Stress Management” at this link.

Set Your Canvas Notification Preferences

This course depends upon your ability to receive communications from your instructor and/or about the class. It's important that you set up your Canvas “notification preferences” to choose how and when you'd like to receive messages via text, email, or both. Find easy-to-follow instructions at "How do I set my Canvas notification preferences as a student?"

This is the Spring 2021 Syllabus. It is being updated for the 2022 course.

We strongly recommend that you opt to receive notification of Announcements, Conversation Messages, and Added to Conversation so that you don't risk missing important class communication. For assistance, please contact me or help@umn.edu.

Prerequisites and Complementary Courses

There is no prerequisite for this course.

This elective course should be considered a supplement to other courses on research methods, not a replacement. I strongly encourage students to take courses on qualitative research methods, surveys, and other methods-focused courses. The approach taught in this course is more like investigative journalism paired with advocacy than like social science research or other scientific disciplines.

University and School policies

For links to University of Minnesota and Humphrey School policies, please click the "U of M Policies" link on our course Canvas site, or see <https://z.umn.edu/PolicyStatements>. Policies include information on student conduct, scholastic dishonesty, sexual harassment, equal opportunity, disability accommodations, and more.

Land Acknowledgment

The University of Minnesota - Twin Cities is located on the traditional, ancestral and contemporary homelands of the Dakota people. It is important to acknowledge the peoples on whose land we live, learn, and work as we seek to improve and strengthen our relations with our tribal nations. We also acknowledge that words are not enough. We must ensure that our institution provides support, resources, and programs that increase access to all aspects of higher education for our American Indian students, staff, faculty, and community members.
